Notes for XVIII Sunday of the Year

The social concern of the Church directed toward the authentic development of the individual & society, respecting all dimensions of the human person, has expressed itself in varied ways:

Summi pontificatus of Pius XII,
Gaudium et Spes of Vatican Council II,
Populorum progressio of Paul VI,
Sollicitudo rei socialis of John Paul II
Caritas in veritate of Benedict XVI,
The Catechism of the Catholic Church: 1939

Solidarity helps us to see the other – whether a person, people, or nation – not just as some kind of instrument but also as a neighbour. One's neighbour is not only a human being with his or her rights & a fundamental equality but also the living image of God, redeemed by the blood of Christ & placed under the permanent action of the Holy Spirit.

True development cannot consist in the accumulation of wealth if this is to be gained at the expense of the development of people & without due consideration of the social, cultural, & spiritual dimensions of the human being.

The structures of sin can be overcome only through the exercise of the human & Christian solidarity to which the Church calls us, which it tirelessly promotes.
